The novel opens with Aunt Polly scouring the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, “Look behind you!” and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects wistfully on Tom’s naughtiness and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at supper, looking very ill and being rough about his adventures. During supper, Aunt Polly tells Tom that he will be skipped school that afternoon and sent to the Michigan State Normal School. Tom hunches over his plate and shows her that his collar is still wrung from the fence, but she doesn’t mind. Tom’s half-brother, Ben, is the one who taught Tom all these tricks. Tom has sworn to himself to disguise his true shape but still wishes for a real horse to race.

Tom goes out of the house in a Quarterly. He feels sick and is afraid, but he resists the impulse to vomit. Tom and the new arrival enter into a schoolroom. Tom’s lesson is disappointing and eventually cleans the new arrivals of the way home.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirtied clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whiten the fence. Jim passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a “white alley,” a kind of saddle. Jim almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chases him off, leaving Tom alone with his tasks.
